This seminar combines the discovery and analysis of the remains of ancient Greece with immersion in the present day life of Ancient Corinth, a small Greek village. The backbone of the program is formed by visits to the major sites and museums of classical Greece, where the students will be introduced to the traditional problems and methods of art and architecture as primary sources for history. This course strives to create a kind of class that goes beyond the normal Notre Dame world, a class in which the physical and the intellectual and the personal are all equally exercised and appreciated in the pursuit of a truly international experience.

The students will also be encouraged by daily walks and hikes and climbs and discussions to consider the remains of antiquity within the context of their physical environment, a landscape whose geological features remain essentially unchanged from antiquity to the present. The goal is for the students to return to the U.S. feeling personally invested in the history of Greece and in the origins of Western culture.

Highlights include:

- Fully immerse yourself in the art, architecture, and history of Greece and the origins of Western culture
- Embrace an intellectual/experiential, archaeological/art historical and personal/cultural adventure
- Visit major sites and museums of classical Greece
- Walk/hike/discuss daily in the midst of the landscape of antiquity
- Service opportunity through education, sports, and other social programs with local Roma population
